

Tim Blood

Director, Preconstruction | Turner Construction Company

Tim Blood leads Preconstruction for Turner Construction Company's Business Center 5, supporting teams and projects across the Western United States and Vancouver. In his role, Tim focuses on preconstruction strategy, team integration, cost and risk management, and create greater consistency in how owners, designers, builders, and trade partners work together from the earliest stages of a project. He is particularly interested in moving collaboration beyond delivery methods and contractual structures to the behaviors, processes, and shared standards that make high-performing teams repeatable. Tim joins the Collaborative Build panel to bring the perspective of a construction manager working across diverse markets, project types, and delivery models, and to help explore how the industry can turn the idea of collaboration into a practical way of working.