

Dustin Darby

Vice President, Business Development / Integrated Delivery | Parsons

After serving honorably in the United States Army, Dustin entered the construction industry in 1998 as a laborer. Moving quickly through the ranks from Laborer to Project Manager he began overseeing multiple highway construction projects throughout the Midwest. This progressive experience set him on a path to make a greater impact within the industry and in 2010 he accepted the position of Senior Project Manager for the $700M (Segment 2) of the $2.7B LBJ Express P3 Project. He was quickly promoted to US Internal Construction Director and was tasked with developing internal design-build construction capability for P3 design-build concessions throughout North America. After successful implementation, Dustin accepted a role with a global construction/materials group to develop and integrate design-build, collaborative, and alternative delivery capability on a national level for the next 8 years. Currently, Dustin serves as Vice President of Integrated Delivery (Western US) for Parsons.

Dustin is a seasoned leader and innovator in the collaborative transportation construction market, with over 25 years of achievements and contributions to the industry. His experience working at an executive level for both the contractor and the designer gives him the advantage of understanding the unique perspectives of both. Known for his strategic vision and ability to drive results, Dustin has spearheaded initiatives that have reshaped the landscape of large, complex collaborative project delivery across the United States and internationally.

A decorative graphic at the bottom left of the page, featuring a stylized road or path leading towards a series of dots that form a larger shape.

#CONSTRUCT26